Most of the patients with acute lymphoblastic leukemia (ALL) develop new specific antigens due to the treatment of this disorder. The aim of this study was to compare 2 different immunization strategies for children with ALL and to evaluate the effectiveness of this immunization for them. Fifty children with ALL, aged 3-14 years, were selected for the study. Two treatment regimens were compared. The first included BCG vaccine and the other antibiotics, mostly streptomycin and polymyxin B. Side effects were recorded. The antibody response to each antigen was compared between the two groups. There was a significant difference between the 2 treatment regimens regarding the presence of complications and the frequency of reported side effects. The immunization program was efficient for all antigens except for PPD in patients treated with antibiotics, because of a poor response. Antibody response to Streptococcus mutans was found to be significant in patients on no antibiotic treatment (PPrivacy Policy In order to give you the best online experience we use cookies.
