Team: The Politics, the Persistence and the Players Saturday, January 30, 2018 Sled Dog team has attracted a good number of people, especially as we have been beating our tails for a whole year now. Everyone is anxious to see what the results are in terms of bringing about change in a sport that is held in contempt. Some say sled dog racing is sport of cruelty; yet others see it as a sport of patience and perseverance. I guess by now we should have a good idea of the people behind the publicity stunts that are hitting the media headlines. Besides the four core members of team, there are certain influencers who still play active roles in the team. They are the ones that keep the momentum going, who force the teams into doing something that will benefit the team and perhaps benefit the public. The more I look into, the more I am amazed by some of the names that came up. They still show up on the news as fierce figures of protest. It is amazing how some people have spent their entire life in the sport and have only ended up being the talk of the town. The people that have been in the sport most of their lives are often more cynical than us. Who can blame them when the race they have been part of is not exactly a sport of honor. I have been in the sport since I was a kid, I am passionate about the sport and I love my team. I am also aware of the fact that its not the same sport that was there before. The sport has evolved, things have changed, the rules have been re-designed in order to better the sport. It may not be easy for the old timers who have been part of it all their lives but change is inevitable. I also think it is only right that the youngsters have a chance of proving their mettle on the team. For the first time, there is a team for the sled dogs that is drawn from the youths. There are so many of them that have had the skills and the will to prove themselves that they have a chance to be
