Multiple system atrophy (MSA) is a rare, autosomal-dominant degenerative disorder of late onset. This disease is characterized by cerebellar, autonomic and striatal deficits and widespread cortical and brainstem atrophy. We characterized cortical and hippocampal pathology in four MSA patients using detailed quantitative morphometric and immunohistochemical analysis. We found severe degeneration of neocortical and hippocampal structures in all cases. Additionally, we found a significantly reduced number of striatal neurons in two patients compared to other neurodegenerative disorders, whereas in the two other cases an increase of striatal neurons occurred. The neocortical pathology was characterized by neocortical atrophy with relative sparing of the cortical laminae, a loss of neurons and axonal degeneration within the neocortex. In the hippocampus,
